INTRODUCTION AND IMPLEMENTATION OF NEW PROJECTS IN THE WORK OF THE NATIONAL POLICE

International cooperation is an integral part of the activities of the National Police of Ukraine, as it allows us to:

- effectively counter transnational crime;
- exchange experience and best practices;
- improve the qualification level of personnel.

The main areas of international cooperation of the National Police:

- fighting organized crime, terrorism, human trafficking, illicit trafficking in drugs, weapons and explosives;
- ensuring public safety during international events;
- exchange of information and experience with law enforcement agencies of other countries.
- participation in international training programs:

Cooperation with international organizations such as Interpol, Europol, FRONTEX. [1]

The National Police is constantly introducing and implementing new projects within the framework of international cooperation, including:

Transparent Police Officer project. Its goal is to increase transparency and accountability of police work. This involves the use of body cameras, publication of statistics on police work, and regular meetings with the public.

The Single Police Space project. This project is aimed at creating a single system of law enforcement in the European Union. It provides for the exchange of information and experience with police agencies of other EU countries, as well as joint work on investigating crimes.

Cyber Police Project. This project is aimed at combating cybercrime. It envisages the creation of a special police unit that will investigate cybercrime and conduct preventive work with the public.

The National Police of Ukraine is actively using new technologies in international cooperation, which allows it to fight crime more effectively and exchange information with law enforcement agencies in other countries. Here are some of these technologies:

INTERPOL information exchange system. This system allows police agencies from different countries to exchange information about criminals, crime investigations, and other issues.

The Europol Information System (EIS). This system allows police agencies of the European Union member states to exchange information about criminals, crime investigations and other issues.

SWIFT system. This system allows you to track financial transactions, which can be useful for investigating crimes related to money laundering and terrorist financing.

International cooperation is a key factor in the successful work of the National Police of Ukraine. It allows the police to effectively combat crime, share experience and best practices, and improve the skills of its personnel. The introduction and implementation of new projects in this area will allow Ukraine to further strengthen its law enforcement system and make the country safer. [2]

FEATURES OF POLICE TRAINING IN EUROPEAN COUNTRIES

In any transformative processes occurring in society, the issue of unhindered functioning of the law enforcement system plays a key role. In light of recent high-profile events related to the activities of the police and other law enforcement agencies, the question of the quality of police training has become extremely important. For the development of the law enforcement system in Ukraine, it is quite important to involve positive experiences from foreign countries, which will lead to the search for new, flexible, and effective approaches to ensure certain changes and innovations. Reforming the police training system is among the most important and complex tasks of social transformation in any setting.

Police officers risk their lives every day. This profession is extremely complex and responsible. Personnel provision is one of the important issues for the Ministry of Internal Affairs.

Modern scholars differentiate between centralized, semi-centralized, and decentralized systems of personnel training for law enforcement agencies in the European Union. Centralized systems are characterized by the presence of a single multi-level system of educational institutions with a central higher education institution (from initial training to leadership training). Semi-centralized systems have regional educational institutions that provide initial training, specialized training, and advanced training in
